FOX 5's Rosanna Scotto, LIA President Kevin Law, and Stony Brook LI Children's Hospital Chief Maureen McGovern, MD Receive Awards from Child Abuse Prevention Services

ROSLYN, NY: Child Abuse Prevention Services (CAPS) honored three special individuals committed to the well-being, health and safety of children at its 26th Annual Spring Luncheon on Friday, April 1 at The Carlton, East Meadow.

Rosanna Scotto, co-host of FOX 5 Good Day New York, received the CAPS Community Leadership Award for her efforts to create awareness around the issues of child abuse and neglect, and bullying among school-age children through her work. She was also the Luncheon speaker.

Margaret M. McGovern, MD, PhD, Physician-in-Chief, Stony Brook Long Island Children's Hospital and Professor and Chair, Department of Pediatrics, Stony Brook University Medical Center received the CAPS Distinguished Service to Children Award for her demonstrated commitment to children and dedication to their continued well-being.

Kevin S. Law, President and CEO, Long Island Association received the CAPS Champion for Long Island Award for his community service efforts to elevate the quality of life for families in Nassau and Suffolk counties and build a better Long Island.

Past honorees of the CAPS' Community Leadership Award have included Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, Congresswoman Carolyn McCarthy, bully prevention activist John Halligan, Internet safety expert Parry Aftab, and social change philanthropist, Abigail Disney.

Founded in 1982, the Roslyn-based Child Abuse Prevention Services is Long Island's comprehensive resource center for the prevention of child abuse, bullying and peer harassment. CAPS is a non-profit organization underwritten by private donations, grants and legislative appropriations. Information about programs, educational materials and volunteer opportunities is available at www.capsli.org, or by calling 516-621-0552 or 631-289-3240.
